Instalando Programas

---

Existem diversas maneiras de se instalar programas no Linux. Podemos dizer basicamente que elas se dividem em duas formas: baseadas em código fonte e baseadas em pacotes.

A forma mais simples de você arrumar um programa para instalar é através da internet, ou até mesmo em cd's de instalação de alguma distribuição. A vantagem de ser pela internet e no site do desenvolvedor, é que você estará instalando uma versão mais recente.

Instalando por código fonte

A mais tradicional e ausente na maior parte dos demais sistemas operacionais, é aquela onde se dispõe do código fonte do programa e a instalação consiste em compilar este código, gerando o código objeto (também chamado de binário ou executável).

Junto com o código fonte é fornecido um script para facilitar a compilação do programa. Geralmente, isto é feito utilizando se a seguinte sequência de comandos, dentro do diretório do programa a ser compilado:

[user@linux programa] $ ./configure
[user@linux programa] $ make
[root@linux programa] # make install

Note que para o comando `make install`, é necessário que você esteja como `root`, pois o mesmo comando irá copiar para o diretório `/usr` o programa compilado.

Não é necessário sempre instalar o programa após compilá-lo, você (depende do programa), pode utilizá-lo diretamente do diretório aonde foi compilado.

Gerenciadores de pacotes

A segunda forma é baseada em pacotes, ou seja, o programa já compilado (código objeto ou executável) é "empacotado", junto com os demais arquivos que sejam necessários para seu funcionamento.

Existem diversos tipos de pacotes, como `rpm` (usado pela Red Hat e derivados), `deb` (Debian e derivados) e `tgz` (Slackware). Aqui vale uma observação: existe uma certa confusão entre os formatos `tgz` e `tar.gz`. O primeiro é o formato dos pacotes de programas utilizado pelo Slackware, enquanto o segundo são apenas arquivos agrupados pelo comando `tar` e compactados com `gzip`.

Praticamente todas as principais distribuições de Linux utilizam algum programa gerenciador de pacotes, existindo também programas para conversão de um tipo de pacote em outro. Exemplos de gerenciadores de pacotes: `RPMDrake`, `GnoRPM`, `pkgtool`, etc. Exemplos de conversores de pacotes: `alien`, `rpmtotgz`, etc.

Para instalar um pacote rpm, basta digitar:

[root@linux tmp] # rpm -ivh programa.rpm

Outras opções do rpm:

Removê-lo: `[root@linux tmp] # rpm -e programa.rpm`

Pacotes instalados: `[root@linux tmp] # rpm -qa`

Informação sobre determinado programa instalado:

[root@linux tmp] # rpm -qi programa

Para instalar um .tgz (slackware):

[root@linux tmp] # installpkg programa.tgz

Para removê-lo: [root@linux tmp] # removepkg programa.tgz

Para executar o programa, basta digitar o nome do mesmo no console (terminal).

Compiladores

---

Utilizando compiladores no linux.

C/C++

Para compilar arquivos .c (programa.c) utilize o gcc :

[user@linux programa] $ gcc programa.c -o programa

A opção -o é para referenciar o nome do executável a ser gerado.

Se for em C++ (.cpp), basta trocar por g++ :

[user@linux programa] $ g++ programa.cpp -o programa

Java

Para usar o java, você deve fazer o download do mesmo na página da sun (java.sun.com) e descompactá-lo em um diretório qualquer. Após isso é necessário fazer com o que o seu interpretador de comandos (shell – bash) reconheça o Java e seu compilador (javac).

[user@linux programa] $ bash j2sdk-1_4_2_02-linux-i586.bin

[user@linux programa] $ cd j2sdk1.4.2_02/bin

[user@linux bin] $ pwd

/usr/local/j2sdk1.4.2_02/bin

[user@linux programa] $ PATH="$PATH:/usr/local/j2sdk1.4.2_02/bin"

Após isso é só digitar javac Arquivo.java para compilar.
